Graffiti is freedom.

We remain faithful to the original meaning of street art – when the graffiti artist was a rebel, and not a decorator of facades on demand.

Deliberately violating social norms, we pour out our unconscious onto the street walls.

As the founding fathers commanded: at your own risk and peril enter a rage of adrenaline with balloon/bomb in hand, spit on the dictates of consumerism, forgetting their own weaknesses, in one night swapping the constrained "I must" for a loud "I want!"

Every tag – and there is a such a cry, like an insolent stain beating by a faceless everyday life.

How long will it resound – one moment, when the "bombed-out" train passes into the tunnel, or several years, until the city services are razed to ruins on the ground, having become just a "spot" – is not so important.

The main thing - that we are not afraid to belong to our own desires.

And you want the same...!
